Sheep

Peretti: Sheep

[Marilyn Peretti]

These sheep are quiet,
an envied patience
that comes naturally.
My eyes dwell on the thick thick coats, quarter-sized curls of silver, laced into strands of dusty brown, dense wool of the Lincoln breed. And my pulse slows as I lean into the broad white boards of their pen at the County Fair, touching their oily coats and speaking to them, as their contented eyes speak to me.

It's Not Like in the Movies

[Wilda Morris]

On the METRA
heading into Chicago
we pass
a long train
heading out
on the next track.
Through the window
I don't see a man stab
a beautiful woman.
No gangster presses
a pile of cash
into an open hand.
No sign of any conspiracy.
All I see as I stare are reflections of the people in my eastbound car but I have to admit
we all look suspicious.
